

AGENCY SPECIFIC ENFORCEMENT PRIORITIES

J.A. White helps organizations convert FAR/DFARS requirements into practical, agency aligned compliance strategies that reflect how different agencies review, audit, and enforce procurement standards.

While regulations are established at the FAR/DFARS level, enforcement expectations often differ between DoD and civilian agencies. J.A. White assists contractors in adapting their procurement systems to meet those distinct oversight expectations.

Through CPSR-focused tools and consulting, J.A. White helps companies prepare for the areas most commonly scrutinized during DCMA reviews. These solutions align procurement systems with actual auditor expectations and not just regulatory language.

Different agencies prioritize different compliance risks. Our firm helps contractors navigate these differences by translating agency specific enforcement expectations into practical procurement workflows that support day-to-day decision making.

We support enforcement clause alignment by helping contractors understand how agencies interpret FAR/DFARS during audits, CPSRs, and procurement reviews. Through clause automation, we align procurement systems with real world compliance expectations.
